FOREWORD BY

THE HONORABLE DANTE B. FASCELL

The Helsinki Final Act is a remarkable document in that it has inspired diverse elements in the Soviet Union and elsewhere to press for rights supposedly guaranteed them by their own governments. Such groups include Soviet religious believers who are asking that the Soviet authorities fulfill their Helsinki promise to "respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice...religion...in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience." For example, the Christian Committee to Defend the Rights of Believers, composed of three Russian Orthodox churchmen, has been instrumental in publicizing violations of the rights of religious believers of all faiths. For its efforts, the Committee -- along with other Soviet Helsinki monitors -- was nominated by the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe for the 1979 Nobel Peace Prize.

Another tack is taken by other Soviet Christians, mainly Evangelical Protestants, who have decided they can no longer live in the USSR -- some 10,000 have publicly declared their intention to emigrate. The Helsinki Final Act encourages emigration requests in that its signatories promised to promote "freer movement...among persons...of the participating states" and to abide by their commitments in other international agreements.

The volume documents the plight of Soviet Evangelical Protestants and examines the reasons why these people have decided that only emigration can save them. Compiled, edited, and translated by the staff of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, the materials included here represents the most complete documentation in English of this problem.

In the introduction to this volume, Representative John Buchanan of Alabama, a member of the CSCE Commission who is also a Baptist minister, provides a cogent overview of the problems of Soviet Evangelical Protestants. All of us who have worked with Representative Buchanan know him as the earliest and strongest Congressional advocate for the release from prison camp of Georgy Vins, the Soviet Baptist leader.

Over three years ago, in March 1976, he sponsored a Congressional Resolution calling for the immediate release of Pastor Vins and for religious liberty in the Soviet Union. Congressman Buchanan continued to raise the Vins case as often as possible in international fora -- including the Belgrade Review Conference, the U.N. Human Rights Commission, and with Soviet leaders in January of 1978 who were part of a delegation from the Supreme Soviet.

For such advocacy of the Vins case and for the cause of religious freedom, Congressman Buchanan was attacked in the Soviet press in a lengthy article in Liternaturnaya Gazeta of November 1976.

Pastor Vins is now in the United States as a result of a dramatic exchange of two convicted Soviet spies for five imprisoned Soviet human rights activists, including Aleksandr Ginzburg, Valentyn Moroz, Eduard Kuznetsov and Mark Dymshitz. For the release of Georgy Vins we owe a vote of thanks to Congressman Buchanan for his unswerving championship of the Vins family. We hope that the release of the Vins family will serve as an impetus for the Soviet Union to honor its pledges in the Helsinki Final Act and in other international documents to respect the religious rights of its citizens.

INTRODUCTION BY

THE HONORABLE JOHN BUCHANAN

The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe is publishing here the names and addresses of over 10,000 Evangelical Protestants who have publicly declared their intention to emigrate from the Soviet Union to escape religious persecution. A total of 5,000 of these declarations have come from the Ukraine; 2,500 from the RSFSR -- mostly from Siberia and the Pacific coast where these believers moved in a vain attempt to escape persecution; the remaining people hail from eight other republics in the USSR. Multinational in composition, this emigration movement is also unique in that these Evangelical Protestants seek to leave the Soviet Union not only as family units, but as entire religious communities.

In addition to this list of 10,000 Soviet citizens, this publication represents the most complete collection of English materials on the Pentecostal Church in the Soviet Union. Among these materials are three reports by the Moscow Helsinki Group, including two accounts by Lydia Voronina and Arkady Polishchuk of their trips for the Group to distant Pentecostal communities which seldom meet anyone from Moscow -- let alone dissidents. It is the work of the Moscow Helsinki Group which first called public attention to the plight of Soviet Pentecostals. And the Soviet authorities have reacted harshly to this publicity: the Group document (which is included in this publication) on the right to emigrate for religious reasons figured prominently in the trials of Aleksandr Ginzburg and Yuri Orlov.

The difficulties of emigrating from the Soviet Union are well known. Why, then, have these 10,000 believers decided to undertake the risks of trying to emigrate? The materials published in this collection show a religious community which had endured three generations of official persecution merely for the sake of their religion. And, although the methods of repression no longer include the death penalty, they are still harsh enough to convince many believers that their only salvation lies in emigration.

Among the battery of repressive measures still used by the Soviet authorities: fines and dispersals of illegal religious services; prison sentences for those who are conscientious objectors to military service on religious grounds; systematic and wide-spread discrimination in education and employment. Even the children of religious parents are not immune from recriminations: they are sometimes teased or even beaten up by school-mates, sometimes at the instigation of their teachers; children are often publicly berated for holding "anti-Soviet views" and frequently receive poor grades as a result.

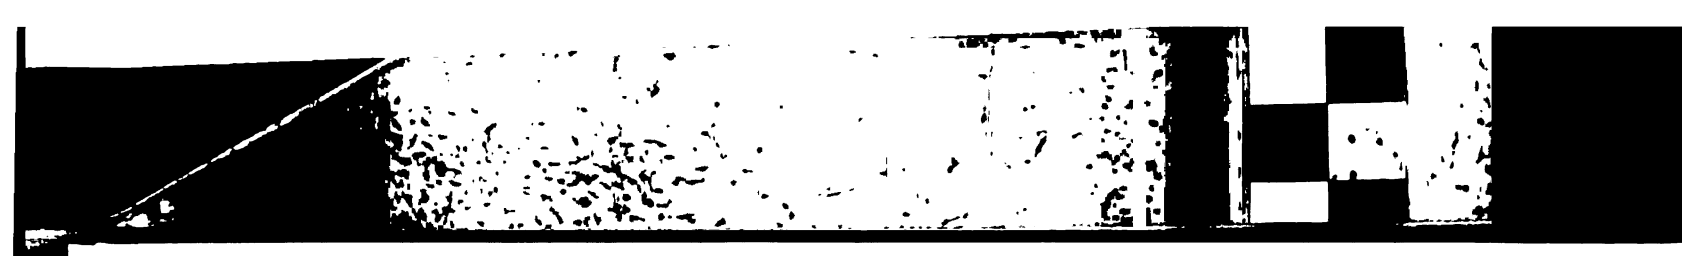

Other methods of persecution are more severe. Pastors -- such as the 83-year-old Seventh Day Adventist leader, Vladimir Shelkov, who was sentenced in March of this year to five years in labor camp -- are subject to criminal penalties for their leadership of illegal congregations. Devout believers of all faiths have been known to be sent off to psychiatric hospitals for holding "extreme" religious views. For example, Anna Chertkova, a Baptist, was seized on the street in 1973 and since then has been incarcerated in a psychiatric hospital in Tashkent, Uzbekistan. Since it is illegal for Soviet citizens to give religious instruction to their own children, there are instances in which the state authorities forcibly remove children from religious parents and send them off to orphanages. One such incident occurred in March 1976, when Ukrainian authorities took away three children from Maria Suprunovich, a Baptist, and sent them to a state orphanage.

Despite all evidence to the contrary, Soviet authorities persist in maintaining that there is total freedom of religion in their country. In an interview published in the September 21, 1978 issue of Komsomolskaya Pravda, the Deputy Chairman of the Soviet Council Ministers Council for Religious Affairs, V.G. Furov, asserted that the fundamental law of the USSR guarantees freedom of conscience. And yet Soviet legislation on religion requires as the part of the price for legalization (formally known as registration) that a church give up all missionary activity and all youth participation in church affairs. While these laws apply to all religious groups in the USSR, many thousands of Evangelical Protestants -- including Baptists, Pentecostals, Seventh Day Adventists and Mennonites -- refuse to submit to the conditions of registration as contrary to fundamental tenets of their religious beliefs. Any unregistered religious community in the Soviet Union -- be it Moslem, Christian or Jewish -- is deemed illegal and subject to criminal penalties.

Recent events have brought several Soviet Protestant families to Western attention from among the thousands of Evangelical Christians and others who want to leave the USSR for reasons of religious persecution. Two such families are those Pentecostals from Siberia who are hiding out in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow until the Soviet authorities grant them permission to emigrate. One of these families, the Vashchenkos, have been trying to emigrate since 1961 when they first visited the U.S. Embassy to plead for support in emigrating from the USSR. After this first visit, four of the Vashchenko children were placed in an orphanage; after his visit in 1968, Pyotr Vashchenko spent several months in a psychiatric hospital. Sympathetic to the desperate situation of the two Pentecostal families, 66 members of the U.S. House of Representatives and four U.S. Senators appealed to the Soviet authorities on May 1, 1979 to let these families emigrate to the United States.

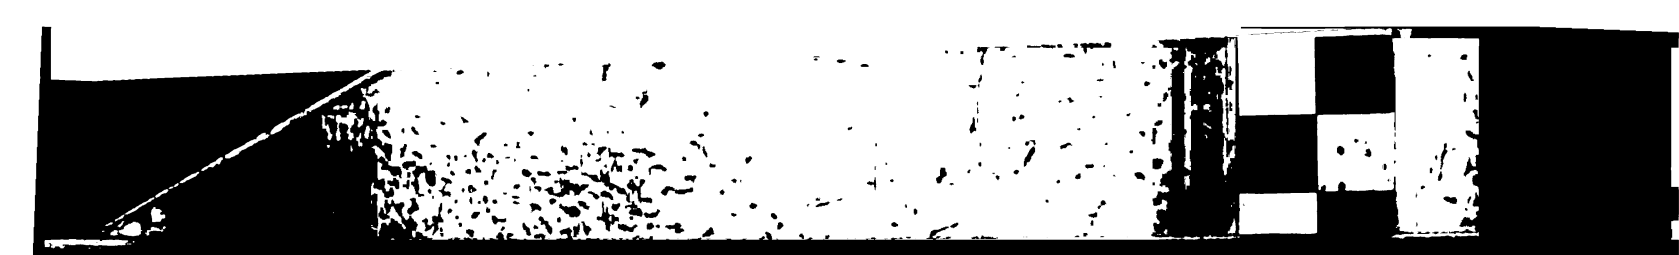

As a result of the recent dramatic exchange of two Soviet spies for five prominent Soviet human rights activists, Georgy Vins, a leader of the unregistered Baptists in the Soviet Union, is now in the United States. It is very fitting that he and the other members of his remarkable family should live in America. After all, Pastor Vins' father, Petr Vins, left Russia in the early years of this century to come to the United States to receive theological education which was unavailable in his native country, returning to the USSR in 1922. Petr Vins went to the Colgate-Rochester Divinity School in Rochester, New York. From 1919-1922, he attended the Southern Baptist Seminary in Louisville, Kentucky -- the same seminary from which I was later to graduate.

In welcoming Pastor Georgy Vins and his family to our country, we also look forward to the day when all believers of all faiths in the Soviet Union will be free to practice their religion without State interference. In signing the Helsinki Final Act, the Soviet Union committed itself to:

"...recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience."

TWO PENTECOSTAL FAMILIES IN THE U.S. EMBASSY IN MOSCOW

I.

Since June 1978, two Pentecostal families from the Siberian mining town of Chernogorsk have been living in the United States Embassy in Moscow, refusing to leave until Soviet authorities allow them to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Pyotr Vashchenko, his wife and three daughters, and Maria Chmykhalova and her teenage son, rushed past Soviet guards outside the Embassy on June 27, 1978. The Soviet police seized Vashchenko's son, Ioan, at the Embassy gates. He was released two weeks later, but reportedly Ioan had been beaten and tortured while in custody. The seven Pentecostals are now living in a one room basement apartment after camping in the consular section lobby for several months. Thus far, intercessions with Soviet authorities on their behalf by American officials and appeals by Nobel Peace Prize laureate Andrei Sakharov have failed.

Sakharov describes the Embassy sit-in as "a completely desperate action." Indeed, for 17 years Pyotr Vashchenko, father of 13 and leader of the Chernogorsk Pentecostal community, has been trying to emigrate from the USSR to escape religious persecution. For such efforts the family has suffered numerous recriminations.

In 1963, Mrs. Vashchenko and a group of Pentecostals stayed at the U.S. Embassy for several hours in an effort to obtain Soviet exit visas. As a result, Soviet authorities placed four Vashchenko children in a state orphanage for several months. After he visited the U.S. Embassy in 1968, Pyotr Vashchenko was confined for a period to a psychiatric hospital. In 1974, a Chernogorsk court ruled that the five children should be removed from the Vashchenko home, but the decision was never carried out. Again, in 1975, Vashchenko made a futile journey to the Embassy. Returning in June 1978--with a notarized invitation from an Alabama family to emigrate to the U.S.--Vashchenko is now determined to remain at the Embassy.

Private voluntary contributions from Embassy personnel have sustained the Vashchenkos and Chmykhalova for the past months. Embassy officials are, however, trying to persuade the Pentecostals to leave since the American government cannot obtain Soviet exit permission for them. The Embassy limits the two families' contacts with the outside world. The State Department will not accept mail to them via diplomatic pouch while, at the same time, Soviet authorities intercept letters sent via regular mail. In an appeal to President Carter--the details of which were made public in September--Vashchenko complained that Embassy personnel were pressuring the Pentecostals to return home and that they were not receiving any mail from the West.

The two Pentecostal families are discouraged but persevere, maintaining they have nothing more to lose. Thousands of other Pentecostals in the Soviet Union believe that their last and only hope lies in emigration.

SOVIET LEGISLATION ON RELIGION

II.

The Soviet Constitution ostensibly grants citizens freedom of religion. Soviet law, however, discriminates against religious believers in its definition of religious societies, marriage and family relationships, education, and compulsory military service.

Constitutional Provisions

Article 52 of the Soviet Constitution formally guarantees "freedom of conscience"--the right to profess any religion or to profess none. At the same time, the article affirms the right of citizens to engage in atheistic propaganda, while prohibiting the "incitement of hostility and hatred in connection with religious beliefs." This catch-all clause effectively outlaws everything from missionary work to organized charitable activities and has been cited as justification for sentencing religious believers. Article 52 also specifically calls for the separation of church from state and school, thereby--in conjunction with Soviet laws on religion--banning religious training for youth.

Soviet Law on Religion

The legislation "On Religious Associations" was first adopted in April, 1929. Amended and released in 1975, many restrictions on religious practice were made public for the first time. The law does not recognize any church as an independent organization uniting all believers adhering to the same creed. Each group of believers is treated not as part of the church of its creed, but simply as a group of individuals who want to satisfy their own religious needs. Primarily, the law defines a religious society, outlining the conditions under which such societies can have a legal existence.

First, a religious group--at least 20 members over the age of 18--must register with the Council of Religious Affairs of the Soviet Council of Ministers. To do so, it must provide detailed information on its membership and agree to certain restrictions before it can obtain legal authorization. The decisions of the Council of Religious Affairs cannot be appealed. Until recently, Pentecostal and Baptist congregations could not be registered separately since the Pentecostal religion was deemed illegal.

Secondly, a religious cult cannot own its prayer house. Instead, believers must buy, repair, and insure (at exorbitant rates) a building as a place of worship and turn it over to the government, which in turn allows the congregation to use the building. If the authorities feel that the congregation has violated any regulations, then it has the right to annul the contract and confiscate the prayer house.

Moreover, all church leaders must be approved by the state authorities. Under these legal requirements for registration, ex-prisoners cannot hold church office. This is a significant exclusion because most Pentecostal deacons and ministers have, at one time or another, served prison terms since their church was outlawed in the USSR for approximately 50 years. Leaders of a registered congregation are required to report any visitor from another congregation to local state officials, thereby alerting the police and the KGB.

Most Pentecostal congregations in the Soviet Union have refused to register with the government, holding that the conditions for registration directly contradict the Bible and their religious beliefs. In order to obtain legal status through registration, the Pentecostals must accept a ban on the religious education and participation in church life of youth and on proselytizing, two key tenets of Pentecostal doctrine. Organized charitable activities and auxiliary church clubs are also forbidden. Agreeing to these and other prohibitions would be tantamount to a true believer's committing "spiritual suicide," in the view of Evgeny Bresenden, a prominent Soviet Pentecostal now living in California. (Statement of Evgeny Bresenden before the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, April 27, 1977. Unless noted otherwise, all information and commentary attributed to Mr. Bresenden are from his statement before the Commission.)

The Pentecostals' firm opposition to registering and supporting any authorized religious organization is reinforced by their suspicion that the KGB has infiltrated the top echelons of the official church. There are frequent charges that church leaders approved by the regime are actually in the employ of the government. Speaking for the Pentecostals, Evgeny Bresenden avers: "Those leaders of religious communities who agreed to the conditions of registration are seen by believers in the USSR as betrayers of the interests of believers and as executors of the will of the atheists."

Provisions in the Criminal Code

Members of unregistered Pentecostal congregations may face criminal prosecution for violating specific Soviet statutes on religion. For example, Article 142 of the Russian Criminal Code specifies the punishment for violation of laws on separation of church and state and church and school. According to this law, a believer can be fined or sentenced to up to one year of correctional tasks (a repeat offender can be punished by up to three years "deprivation of freedom") for providing his children with a religious education or for participating in any unauthorized church activity.

Article 227 of the RSFSR Criminal Code defines the crime of infringing on the rights of individual citizens under the guise of performing religious ceremonies. The statute states:

Organizing or directing a group, the activity of which, carried on under the appearance of preaching religious beliefs and performing religious ceremonies, is connected with causing harm to citizens' health or...with inducing citizens to refuse social activity or performance of civic duties, or with drawing minors into such group, shall be punished by a deprivation of freedom for a term not exceeding five years or by exile for a similar term...

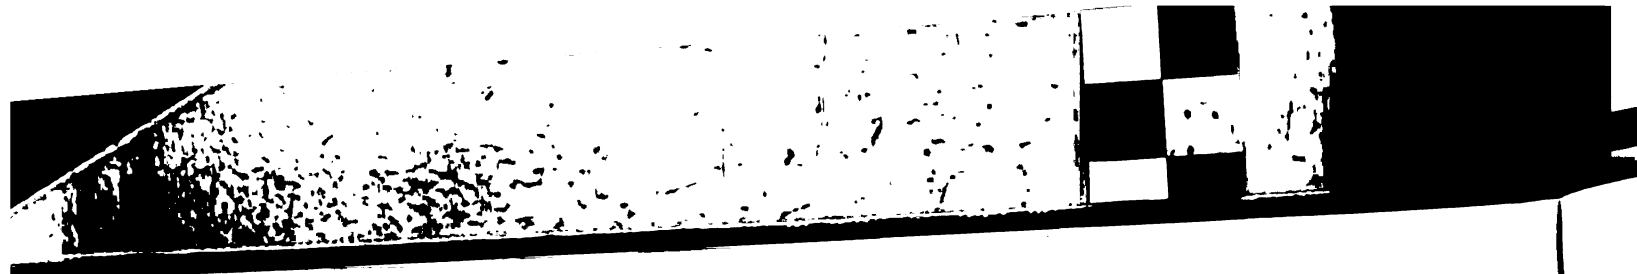

Article 227 specifies further that participation in the activity of such a group or "systematic propaganda directed at the commission" of the aforementioned acts is also punishable by prison, internal exile, or "correctional tasks."

A practicing Pentecostal may be prosecuted for other offenses. As Aleksandr Ginzburg and Yuri Orlov stated in Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group Document 5, Repression Against Religious Families:

Soviet ideological policy requires a total immersion of the young in the so-called Communist education. This ideological principle is supported by the corresponding articles of the Code on Family and Marriage.

Soviet parents are required to educate their children "according to the morality of the builders of Communism." (Article 52 of the RSFSR Code on Family and Marriage) If they do not provide their children with such an education--if they refuse to let them join Communist youth groups or instead raise them with a religious education--then a court order may deprive them of their parental rights and the children can be removed from their custody. Under Soviet law, parents may lose rights to their children if they "exert a bad influence on their children by their amoral anti-social behavior." (Article 59)

Official repression, in the form of prosecution for criminal offenses, combined with administrative harassment and discrimination in daily life has driven many Soviet Pentecostals to seek emigration.

CURRENT DIFFICULTIES OF SOVIET BELIEVERS

III.

Encouraged by the provisions of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe that call on signatory states to "respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice... religion...in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience" and which advocate the "freer movement...among persons...of the participating states...", Pentecostals and, increasingly, unregistered Baptists have tried to emigrate from the Soviet Union since 1975 in record numbers and as religious communities. The Pentecostal emigration movement could become the largest exodus of Christian believers that has even occurred under the Soviets. (Michael Rowe, Background on the Pentecostals, Keston College Document, April 13, 1977.) So far, Soviet authorities have frustrated Pentecostal efforts to emigrate, despite the attempts of some private western groups to aid the believers. To date only seven Pentecostal families have been allowed to emigrate from the USSR for undisguised religious reasons--all of them have had to declare Israel as their destination. (Telephone conversation with Evgeny Bresenden on April 4, 1979.) The Pentecostals, meanwhile, have resorted to new tactics to achieve their ends, as they have become more desperate in their struggle to leave the Soviet Union.

Currently, more than half the Pentecostal communities in the USSR refuse to comply with the conditions of registration. Such refusal to register has consigned the sect to a long history of persecution at the hands of the Soviet authorities. Official repression up to and including imprisonment continues to the present day.

Fines and Penalties

If a religious sect of any denomination is not registered with the state, it cannot obtain an official house of worship. They must meet privately, sometimes clandestinely, and always illegally, to conduct worship services, weddings, funerals, etc. Often the local militia raid and disperse these gatherings, arresting the participants. More commonly, the authorities fine believers for holding or attending services. These fines--levied again and again--weigh heavily on Pentecostals, Adventists, and Baptists who usually earn low wages and have large families to support. For example, in October, 1975 an 85-year-old Pentecostal from Maloyaroslavets living on a pension of 45 rubles per month was fined 50 rubles. (Moscow Helsinki Group Document #23)

Leaders and believers alike are arrested and imprisoned for violating specific laws that regulate religious cults. (Evgeny Bresenden appended a list of 26 Pentecostal prisoners of conscience to his May 9, 1977 written statement to the CSCE Commission.) The arrest and trial in 1974 of Evin Fedotov, a Pentecostal deacon who received a sentence of three years in strict regime camp, was reported extensively in Soviet samizdat. (Unofficial publications)

Other believers are incarcerated in psychiatric hospitals simply for avowing their religious faith, possessing religious documents, or expressing a desire to emigrate. According to Evgeny Bresenden, in 1959, 80 Pentecostals from the Donetsk territory were placed in psychiatric hospitals; 24 of them died as a result of the "treatment" they received there. The practice of forcibly confining believers to psychiatric institutions still occurs. Anna Chertkova, a 52-year-old Baptist from Alma-Ata, Kazakhstan, was seized on the street in 1973. Since then, she has been incarcerated in a psychiatric hospital in Tashkent, Uzbekistan.

Military Conscription

Pentecostals, Baptists, and Adventists often receive lengthy prison terms when they refuse to serve in the Soviet military because they are pacifists, because they do not want to defend an atheistic nation, or because they fear that military service will damage their chance to emigrate. For example, on July 11, 1978, Aleksandr Kalyashin was sentenced to three years general regimen labor camp for refusing to take the Soviet army oath of allegiance. Kalyashin's home address is RSFSR, Vladimirskaia rayon, Murom, Privoksalnaya Square 1/4. Those that do serve in the Army tell of beatings, torture, and at the very least, ridicule of believers by their superior officers.

Parental Rights

One of the most frequent repressive measures applied against Pentecostals is the removal of children from their parents' homes and the forced separation of families. Children are placed in state orphanages where they can be shielded from the "pernicious" influence of their parents and be brought up as atheists.

Indeed, it is the official and unofficial reprisals against their children that most distress the Pentecostals. There are numerous accounts of Pentecostal children who are insulted by their teachers and taunted by their schoolmates. Occasionally, they are punished or expelled for professing religious beliefs. In many cases, the children are pressed to join communist youth organizations, and if parents resist the atheistic and communist indoctrination of their children, they render themselves liable under various statutes in Soviet law to the deprivation of their parental rights. For example, in March, 1976 Baptist Maria Suprunovich's three children were taken away from her by Ukrainian authorities. Her address is 71 Lenin Street, Staraya Vyzha, Volynsky district, the Ukraine.

Educational Discrimination

Pentecostals claim that they along with other Soviet believers--especially Adventists and Baptists--are subject to systematic discrimination in the schools that is so pervasive that most have lost all hope of receiving higher education. In 1977, only one percent of the believers attempted to advance beyond the lowest levels of compulsory schooling, and most of these students were rejected on ideological grounds. If they are permitted to matriculate, Pentecostal students must pass obligatory courses in scientific atheism, the history of the Soviet Communist Party, and Marxist ideology. Failure to pass such courses results in expulsion. In 1977 Evgeny Bresenden reported that Vladimir Murashkin was dismissed from a Moscow Institute and Lena Savchenko from an OMSK accounting school because of their religious faith. Students who do manage to successfully complete their courses discover that they cannot find employment commensurate with their education. They are automatically classified as "worker" and compelled to take menial, low-paying jobs.

Employment

Pentecostal spokesmen assert that the right to work is routinely denied to Pentecostals. The Communist Party and local officials who control the hiring and firing at state enterprises can order managers to dismiss religious believers and activists. Sometimes, a believer is forced to resign so that it appears as if he left work voluntarily. Because co-workers often harass fervent believers, working conditions are often unpleasant for a religious Soviet citizen. Most supervisors, however, consider Pentecostals to be superior workers since their faith requires honesty and conscientiousness and prohibits the consumption of alcohol. Believers also have a low absenteeism rate, whereas among average Soviet workers alcoholism, low productivity, and high absenteeism are major problems.

Harassment

Pentecostals and other religious believers are often the victims of a wide variety of both official and unofficial harassment. They are denied the material benefits that are routinely granted to other Soviet citizens. For example, Pentecostals report that it is difficult for them to rent apartments or to place their children in nurseries and day-care centers. Pentecostals believe that their basic civil rights are ignored--their homes are searched without warrants, and many of them are under constant KGB surveillance. Frequently, the authorities censor, and even confiscate Pentecostal mail within the Soviet Union and to and from friends abroad. In 1976, for instance, Christmas cards from American friends--mailed in the U.S.--never reached their Soviet destinations. (Bresenden statement) Telephone lines are tapped, and phone conversations are interrupted. Pentecostals in Krasnoyarskiy and Primorskiy Krays claim that their mail with the U.S. has been completely cut off since the spring of 1978, and believers in the Baltics have had their telephones removed. Consequently, communication with distant Pentecostal communities and with foreign supporters is seriously hampered. Believers are sometimes harassed by "ordinary" Soviet citizens as well. They are cursed as they walk down the streets and are frequent targets of beatings and vandalism. Prominent religious activists receive death threats and are chased off the road by speeding automobiles. In April 1978, Viktor Vasiliev was shot and wounded while directing the choir of a Pentecostal church in Vilnius, Lithuania.

Moreover, activist Christians are denounced in the Soviet press. Local papers often print bitter ad hominem attacks on Pentecostals, depicting them as amoral criminals, black marketeers, and disloyal Soviet citizens who are actually in the pay of foreign intelligence agencies. With the spread of the Pentecostal emigration movement, Soviet newspapers accuse Pentecostals of being Americanists. Such media indictments are on the rise, Pentecostal spokesmen maintain.

Religious Literature

All Soviet Christians complain that there are not enough Bibles and that Soviet officials confiscate those they do obtain. The government severely limits the official publication of religious literature in the USSR. In direct violation of the Helsinki Accords, it is illegal to bring religious literature into the Soviet Union or to print it privately. Religious literature in the non-Russian languages of the USSR is even rarer. A significant number of Bibles printed in the USSR, however, are sold abroad to create the impression that such literature is readily available in the Soviet Union. (Bresenden statement)

Official Intrigues

The Soviet government categorically rejects any allegation that Soviet Evangelical Christians do not worship freely. To weaken Western support of unofficial groups, Moscow publicizes its relative tolerance of the registered Baptist church. The government displays "show churches" to visiting Western clergymen and encourages the official representatives of the regime approved churches--both abroad and in the USSR--to assert that religious liberty is alive and well in the USSR.

Pentecostals attest that in recent years officials seem to have intensified their efforts to entice Pentecostals into joining the "Union of Autonomous Pentecostals," composed of legally registered congregations. Nevertheless, more than half of all Pentecostals in the Soviet Union are members of unregistered congregations. It is among these 250,000 unregistered Pentecostals that one finds those who are agitating to emigrate.

THE EMIGRATION MOVEMENT AMONG SOVIET CHRISTIANS

IV.

The Desire to Emigrate

Many Soviet Christians are convinced that there is no room for them in atheistic Soviet society. Some religious leaders believe that the Pentecostals have been the subject of divine revelation and that God is calling them out of the Soviet Union, just as He summoned the Jews out of Babylon. Indeed, the exodus of Soviet Jews to Israel is viewed as an important religious sign, a harbinger of their own future success.

For others, the years of repression have taken their toll. More and more Pentecostals have come to the conclusion that the persecution against them is orchestrated by the Kremlin and national in scope. The only recourse for them and their children is to leave the country. As Andrey Kovalenko from the northern Caucasus explains in an appeal to the West:

We Christians want not only to save our own souls from death but also those of our children. The Soviet government allows us neither to live in peace or to bring up our children in a Christian way. ("Waiting for the Promised Land," The Economist, July 29, 1978.)

The Pentecostal drive to emigrate received fresh impetus in 1975 when the Soviet press published the full text of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. In that pact, the Soviet Union pledged, among other things, to respect freedom of religion and to facilitate the freer movement of peoples. Evangelical Christians were further heartened by the election of Jimmy Carter, "a brother Christian and Baptist," as U.S. President, as well as by the Administration's subsequent emphasis on human rights in foreign policy.

The Emigration Drive

As of 1979, an estimated 20,000 Pentecostals have expressed a desire to emigrate from the Soviet Union.*/ In 1974, Pentecostal samizdat (unofficial publications) reported the first instance of members applying as a group to emigrate. The large Pentecostal congregations in the Soviet Far East--Chernogorsk and Nakhodka--began the drive to gain exit permission. They were soon joined by other Pentecostals, especially in the northern Caucasus and in the Baltic Republics. Unlike the Jews, Armenians, and Germans, the Evangelical Christians are attempting to emigrate as a group, in entire church communities, rather than as individuals or in separate family units.

*/ To date, detailed documentation on approximately 10,000 emigration cases has been received in the West; Pentecostal spokesmen maintain that details on the remaining case will be forthcoming.

For the most part, they want to go to the U.S., Canada, or Australia. The seven Pentecostal families who were granted permission to emigrate, among them Evgeny Bresenden, did so on visas to Israel. They now live in the U.S. and Canada,

Emigration Difficulties

For the last two years, all written applications for exit permission, even those submitted by Pentecostals who have vyzovs (the required invitations from sponsors abroad), have been rejected. Pentecostals claim that there was a mass turndown across the country in early 1978.

The Kremlin has long discouraged emigration by Soviet citizens and confers exit permission only on the basis of family reunification. Few Pentecostals have relatives in the West, and vyzovs from "brothers/sisters in Christ" are unacceptable to authorities. On exit applications some believers openly declare religious persecution as their reason for seeking emigration. Soviet officials are doubtless reluctant to stretch the grounds for legal emigration to include political or religious disaffection, although the USSR is committed--by various international agreements--to guarantee the right to emigrate.

Soviet authorities have tried to deter would-be emigrants with a battery of punitive measures. Local officials at the visa office (the OVIR) harass and misinform believers. They first grant exit permission and then revoke it, as happened in 1977 with three Nakhodka families. (Tolstoy Foundation, Report on the Situation and Sponsorship of Pentecostals and Baptists from the USSR to the U.S., January 25, 1978.) Vyzovs mailed from Western supporters often do not arrive. Pentecostals who bring documents to the American or Canadian Embassies in Moscow for correction or updating are sometimes arrested and sent home. Activists can have their vyzovs confiscated and be placed under virtual house arrest, forbidden to contact any Western embassies.

In addition, the cost of emigration imposes a serious burden on large and impecunious Pentecostal households. A 500 ruble fee for mandatory renunciation of Soviet citizenship is charged each adult and child. Emigrants must pay a tax to process their documents, plus transportation costs to the West.

After applying to emigrate, as a form of harassment, a citizen may lose his residence permit, thereby also losing his right to certain social services--such as housing, education, and medical care. A believer may also lose his job and become subject to charges of parasitism in addition to the charges of illegal residence in a city or village that he may face because he has no residence permit.

Emigration Activism and Western Support

Since the 1960's, when a religious revival occurred in the Soviet Union, activist Christians have intensified their efforts to attract public support. In 1961, a group of Pentecostals petitioned Khrushchev for permission to legalize their congregations. In 1963, 30 believers, including Pyotr Vashchenko, sought refuge from persecution in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow for a few hours. Some 200 Pentecostals appealed for help to President Nixon when he was in Moscow in 1974.

Over the last several years, Evangelical Christians have become increasingly politicized. Since the signing of the Helsinki Accords, the Pentecostals have seemed more determined to inform the world of their plight. In October 1976, the Tolstoy Foundation received the first petition of Pentecostals and Baptists who wanted to emigrate. In 1977, Keston College, an English center for the study of religion in communist countries, began receiving batches of documents from Soviet Evangelical Christians. Such organizations, and individuals such as Evgeny Bresenden and Reverend Blahoslav Hruby, have been instrumental in publicizing the plight of Soviet Christians. Tolstoy Foundation reports that, as of October 30, 1978, about 200 sponsors in the U.S. have sent vyzovs to over 800 Soviet Christians and that an additional thousand American sponsors are waiting in the wings.

Within the Soviet Union, the Pentecostals seek out Western newsmen and regularly visit foreign embassies. They have petitioned Kremlin officials, sought assistance from world leaders such as U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, and have appealed to various heads of state. The Pentecostals have sent emotional messages--asking for vyzovs and moral support--to the American Congress and people, and Soviet congregations have reinforced links with fundamentalist Christians in the U.S., Britain, and Sweden.

Pentecostals cooperate closely with other persecuted sects, such as the unofficial Baptists and Adventists, and have shown a tendency to link their cause with the broader Soviet dissident movement. The principal samizdat publication of Soviet human rights activists, The Chronicle of Current Events, has recorded more incidents of religious repression as contacts with the Evangelical Christians have expanded. Moscow Helsinki Monitoring Group member, Aleksandr Ginzburg and Group associates Lydia Voronina and Arkady Polischuk have written documents on the Pentecostals which are published in the appendices to this publication. Ginzburg's report included a list of Pentecostal prisoners of conscience and figured prominently in his own trial and that of Moscow Group leader, Yuri Orlov. The Pentecostals have sought the support of dissident physicist and Nobel Peace Prize laureate Andrei Sakharov, viewing him and other activists such as Orlov and Ginzburg as "instruments of God." (Robert C. Toth, "Soviet Pentecostals Live With Constant Persecution," Los Angeles Times, January 2, 1977.)

New Desperation

The Pentecostals expressed concern that the trials of Orlov, Ginzburg, and other dissidents during the summer of 1978 boded ill for their congregations. They have recently begun to voice fears that the Kremlin will soon inaugurate another "get-tough" campaign against them. They expect large-scale repression that only massive pressure from the West will be able to halt. Pentecostal spokesmen ask that U.S. government leaders raise the issue of their emigration with the Kremlin directly and at the highest level. They feel that President Carter should make a personal intervention on their behalf. The sit-in by seven Pentecostals presently seeking refuge in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow cogently demonstrates the new desperation that has gripped believers and the redoubled resolve with which they are pursuing their quest for religious freedom.

Although the primary impetus for the emigration movement among Soviet Evangelical Christians has been societal in nature, theology has also played its part. Biblical references to the destruction of sinful Babylon have been applied to the current travails of believers under the Soviets. However, just as in the Bible the righteous were saved, so too do Soviet Christians believe that they will be saved by the grace of God and help of people of good will. For many thousands of Soviet Christians, emigration is the way to salvation. For thousands of other Soviet Christians, true freedom to practice their faith in the Soviet Union is their path to salvation.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE SOVIET PENTECOSTAL CHURCH

V.

Size and Doctrine of the Pentecostal Church

The Pentecostal church is one of the largest Protestant groups in the world, and in the Soviet Union it is second only to the Soviet Baptist church in size. According to official Soviet accounts, there are some 55,000 Pentecostals in the USSR (Rowe, Keston College Document, April 13, 1977), but Pentecostal spokesmen estimate their number to be far higher: 200,000 adult members, with a total membership of 500,000 including children. (Evgeny Bresenden, Statement Before the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, April 27, 1977) Over half belong to unregistered congregations. The Pentecostal church draws its membership from all the major ethnic groups and nationalities in the Soviet Union, and its congregations are scattered throughout the country, with especially large concentrations of believers in Western Ukraine and in the Soviet Far East. There was a move eastward after Stalin's death and a full-scale migration to the Pacific coast in the early 1960's.

The Pentecostal church in Russia is a direct offshoot of the Pentecostal religion founded in the United States at the beginning of the 20th century. Pentecostalism in the U.S. developed from the revivalist and "Holiness" movements of the late 1800's. Pentecostal doctrine differs from that of traditional Protestant Christianity chiefly in its emphasis on Baptism in the Holy Spirit, accompanied by "speaking in tongues," as the central Christian religious experience. "Speaking in tongues" or glossolalia is the ability to speak in a language completely unknown or foreign to the speaker, and the Pentecostals consider it to be the first sign that one has been truly baptized in the Spirit. Although there is no one standard body of religious tenets observed by all adherents, most Pentecostals believe in the literal infallibility of the Bible, the necessity of missionary work, and a rigorous code of morality. Some believe in divine healing and pacificism; all practice the sacraments of Baptism, usually by immersion, and communion.

History of the Church

As early as 1911, the religion spread to Russia from the United States via Finland. A handful of Russian-born American missionaries established small, separate Pentecostal communities in the western parts of Russia and in the Ukraine. The movement remained rather limited and insignificant until the arrival in 1921 of a well-known pastor from America. The dynamic Russian-born clergyman, Ivan Efimovitch Voronaev, created the National Union of Christians of Evangelical Faith in Odessa to act as a central body to unite individual Pentecostal congregations. (William C. Fletcher, "American Influence on Russian Religion: The Case of the Pentecostals," in Journal of Church and State, Vol. 20 (Spring, 1978), p. 221)

As a result, the new church began to flourish, branching out into other regions of the Soviet Union and even publishing and circulating its own journal. This period of rapid expansion and relative independence, however, was short-lived. In 1928, Stalin inaugurated a virulent anti-religious campaign. He decreed that all religious groups must submit to state control by registering with agencies of the local government and later with the Council on Religious Affairs, a government agency. All unregistered religious organizations were officially declared illegal. Voronaev and other Pentecostal leaders rejected this new policy on religion and refused to pledge their loyalty to the state. This act of defiance was met by the arrest and imprisonment of Voronaev, who later died in prison in either 1936 or 1937. More arrests of Pentecostals throughout the USSR followed, as the state continued its crusade to stamp out religion in the Soviet Union. From 1930 until 1960, thousands of believers perished in labor camps or were executed after sporadic waves of arrests. The recently released Baptist leader, Georgy Vins, stated that between 1928 and 1941, 25,000 Baptists were arrested and only 3,000 managed to survive. Probably many more Pentecostals died during this long period of repression. (Bresenden statement)

Only during World War II was the Pentecostal movement allowed a respite from Stalin's anti-religious drive. He decided to ease somewhat the restrictions on religious organizations in order to secure the needed cooperation of the church in the fight against the German invasion. This reprieve for Soviet churches was short-lived. In 1944, the All-Union Council of Evangelical Christians and Baptists (AUCECB) was set up as an official, government sanctioned organ to direct the Russian Baptist and Evangelical Christian Church. The authorities did not recognize the Pentecostal church as a separate denomination and so, pressured its congregations to register with the state and join the union in an agreement reached in 1945-46 (the August Agreement). (Bresenden statement) This uncomfortable alliance between the Pentecostals and the authorized Baptist Church and the government soon proved disappointing. The legal recognition and protection afforded by AUCECB membership was insufficient, and could not compensate for the concessions the Pentecostals were forced to make, mainly giving up the practice of "speaking in tongues" in public. Many Pentecostal congregations eventually withdrew from the AUCECB. In 1961 a number of disenchanted Baptist congregations, led by the dissident Baptist pastor, Georgy Vins, broke away as well. After Stalin's death in 1953, Soviet religious groups in general and the Pentecostals in particular experienced rapid growth. In 1960, however, Khrushchev embarked on a new anti-religious campaign, with the Pentecostals as a prime target. There were numerous incidents of violence against them, including the razings of churches and homes. Pentecostal spokesmen acknowledge that acts of physical violence directed against church members have gradually decreased since the 1960's, yet still occur with alarming frequency.

The state has now evinced a willingness to allow Pentecostal congregations to register independently--that is, as autonomous units distinct from Baptist congregations--but few have availed themselves of the opportunity. In fact, only about 20 congregations, all from the western areas of the Soviet Union, have registered with the state authorities. The vast majority prefer to remain unregistered and to seek freedom of religion in the West. Soviet Evangelical Christians seem increasingly interested in using the tactics of the Jewish "refuseniks" and the dissidents in seeking outside support. Increased cooperation among various religious groups in the USSR and better contacts with the broader human rights movement suggest new developments which would be worrisome to the Soviet authorities. Evangelical Protestant groups in the USSR are multi-national in composition, are successful in winning new converts, and apparently are popular among rural youth--all these factors make these religious groups a difficult problem for the Soviet authorities.

1. The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions and activities. It emphasizes the need for transparency and accountability in financial reporting.

2. The second part of the document outlines the various methods and techniques used to collect and analyze data. It includes a detailed description of the experimental procedures and the statistical analysis performed.

3. The third part of the document presents the results of the study, showing the trends and patterns observed in the data. It includes several tables and graphs to illustrate the findings.

4. The fourth part of the document discusses the implications of the results and the conclusions drawn from the study. It highlights the significance of the findings and their potential applications in the field.

5. The fifth part of the document provides a summary of the key points and a final conclusion. It reiterates the importance of the study and the need for further research in this area.

Appendices

Included in this section are three reports on the plight of Soviet Evangelical Christians and a list of the names and addresses of those families who have expressed their intention to emigrate. Moscow Helsinki Group Document #11 first appeared in the Commission's February, 1977 compilation of reports of the Public Groups to Promote Observance of the Helsinki Agreement in the USSR. The other reports are being published in English for the first time.

Appendix I

MOSCOW GROUP DOCUMENT #11 ON THE RIGHT TO EMIGRATE FOR RELIGIOUS REASONS

SIGNED BY LUDMILLA ALEKSEEVA, ELENA BONNER,
ALEKSANDR GINZBURG, MALVA LANDA, YURI ORLOV,
ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY AND VLADIMIR SLEPAK
DECEMBER 2, 1976

We present to the public and to the Heads of State of the thirty-five nations which signed the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, a collection of documents, "Go Forth, My People," on the situation of Pentecostals which has led them to decide to leave their country. (The Commission has some of these materials on file.)

The collection consists of declarations, complaints, open letters, court decisions, autobiographies, etc., which reveal the fates of many hundreds of people. The majority of the documents of this collection relate to very recent events (Summer-Fall 1976) but almost all of them present facts about the persecution of Pentecostals which are difficult to call anything less than crimes against humanity and which occurred before August 1, 1976--the date of the signing of the Helsinki Accords. These facts convince one that there are reasons which impelled these patient, believing people to decide to leave the country--even if today the degree of repression is not as great as it was during the 1960's.

The collection follows one main goal, corresponding to Principle VII of Section I of the Final Act of the Helsinki Conference and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, article 13 and 14, where, in part, it is said that "Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own" and "Everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution"--to assist emigration for people who want to emigrate for religious reasons. The Group has not included in this collection documents at its disposal about persecutions, including court sentences, of other Pentecostals who are not at the present time expressing a desire to leave the country.

The fate of Fedotov, the presbyter of the Pentecostal community of the city of Maloyaroslavets, who at the present time is serving a three-year term of imprisonment in camp; the numerous instances of fines for participation in prayer meetings (for example, M. V. Chinarev from Maloyaroslavets, a pensioner born in 1890 who receives a 45-ruble a month pension, was fined 50 rubles in October 1975; the Pyzhev family in Obninsk was fined 200 rubles in November 1975 etc;)--all bear witness to the fact that even after the signing of the Final Act, the Soviet government disregards its obligation "to recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience."

Further substantiation of this is the body of Soviet law itself, which is discriminatory to the believer in the way it deals with religious cults, marriage and the family, popular education, universal obligation to serve in the military, private business, as well as article 142 and 227 of the Criminal Code of the Russian SFSR (and the corresponding articles of the criminal codes of the other Union republics). This Damocles sword of legalized persecution always hangs over religious believers, depriving them of hopes for a better future and leading them to decide to emigrate.

The emigration movement among Pentecostals differs from analogous situations in its massive dimensions--it is not individuals or separate families who announce their intention to emigrate, but rather whole religious communities which have created special initiative organs--Emigration Councils--for this movement.

The Helsinki Group wishes to call to the attention of those governments wanting independent verification of the facts given in this document, that at the end of this collection is included a statement of authenticity given by several members of a commune at Nakhodka, who have already left the country on invitations sent by relatives in Israel (E. Bresenden and N. Plotnikov) and Canada (B. Bogrin). These witnesses can be called by any interested government.

In the collection, another crucial problem is raised for this category of people who desire to emigrate--the money to make possible the right to exit. You see, here one is talking about families with many children (five or seven or more children)--such are the majority of families which are represented in this collection--and these people are badly off, especially due to religious persecution. Yet they take on themselves the support of the poorest among them, they help the families of prisoners, and the old people (all of which is forbidden by Soviet laws on religious cults). One must either help these people or move the Soviet government to rescind the required payment of fees for renunciation of citizenship and visas for those for whom it is impossible. Such a possibility is provided for in the law, but in practice it is done extremely rarely--in those cases when the government feels it is in its own interest.

The Helsinki Group reminds the reader that religious dissenters, fleeing from government persecution, made a considerable contribution to the development of such participant states in the Conference at Helsinki as the USA and Canada.

Appendix II

ACCOUNT OF A JOURNEY TO PENTECOSTAL COMMUNITIES IN THE COSSACK VILLAGE OF STARO-TITAROV IN THE KRASNODARSKY KRAI AND IN THE CITY OF NAKHODKA

BY LYDIA VORONINA FOR THE MOSCOW HELSINKI GROUP
DECEMBER 5-23, 1976

In the summer of 1976, representatives of the Pentecostal communities in Nakhodka appealed to the Moscow Helsinki Group for help in drawing the attention of world public opinion to a problem which they believed had become particularly urgent: their need to leave the USSR for religious reasons, on the one hand, accompanied by the practical impossibility of doing so, on the other. To the Soviet authorities, such grounds for requesting emigration, while absolutely legal, nonetheless appeared incomprehensible (to say the least) and were therefore an inadequate basis on which to approve actual applications.

The members of the Moscow Helsinki Group decided to study the Pentecostal problem in more detail. This decision was based on the available facts regarding the very real difficulties under which the Pentecostals live and work: violations of their legal rights, repression, threats, turning the local population against religious believers, etc. In addition, a large number of those who wanted to emigrate, had suffered a tragic fate in their own country. Finally, the isolation of the cities in which the Pentecostal communities were located made contacts and communication difficult.

At the request of the Moscow Helsinki Group I visited two communities in Staro-Titarovka and in Nakhodka which are typical insofar as many of their members want to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

The Staro-Titarovka community consists of about 100 people who came from the city of Nakhodka and other cities in the late 1960's together with, or following, Nikolai Petrovich Goritov, who had been the pastor of the Nakhodka community where he was exiled after a camp sentence. There are about 300 adult members of the Pentecostal community in Nakhodka.

I met with representatives of almost every family in Staro-Titarovka and talked with over 40 Pentecostals in Nakhodka; I attended their meetings during which I spoke, listened and answered their numerous questions. The people were of various ages -- school children, young men and girls, mothers and fathers, aged men and women. All of them were eager to tell me details of their lives: of their ceaseless misfortunes and sufferings, and their present difficulties. Unfortunately, almost all materials -- including notes from these conversations, and biographies of various Pentecostals -- disappeared during the recent house searches of members of the Moscow Helsinki Group. Therefore, this is more an impressionistic account and a general picture of the life of Soviet Pentecostals than a document with specific facts and statistics.

N.P. Goretoi, his brother A.P. Goretoi, their sons, daughters and other relatives, eagerly told me how their community in Nakhodka was founded and how it has survived. Without knowing this, it is impossible to understand the present circumstances of the Pentecostals and why they are trying to emigrate. The community in Nakhodka (in the extreme East of the USSR) arose after repressions -- continuous under the Soviets -- forced the Pentecostals to keep moving from one city to another. And so, to save themselves and their large families (7-10 children are frequent) from imprisonment, the Pentecostals travelled all across the Soviet Union from the Black Sea (Odessa, where the first community was founded in 1918) to Japan (Nakhodka in 1957). They lived in Central Asia (Alma-Ata, Frunze, Baku), Siberia (Krasnoyarsky krai, Mariinsk, Anzherka, Abakansky krai, Chernogorsk) in Barnaul and in the Kemerovsk oblast. In these cities there are still large communities of Pentecostals who are attempting to emigrate from the Soviet Union. Their total membership is about 5,000. Over a 60-year period, these people have been fleeing persecution which drove them from one Soviet city to the next. And it is persecution which is the motivating force behind the desire to leave the country. As V.F. Petrushev, a member of the Emigration Council of the Nakhodka community says, "We cannot flee any further -- only the Pacific Ocean is left."

The battery of repression by the authorities against the Pentecostals is very broad and varied -- both in the past and in the present. The only thing which has changed since the first years of Soviet power is that people are no longer shot on the spot without a trial, after investigation as an "element pernicious for the bright future". Almost every Pentecostal family has lost someone who was made harmless in this way. As a result, people who are now 30-35 years old never knew their fathers.

When the shooting stopped, people were tried "for religion" and given 25-year sentences under Article 58. Some were released after Stalin's death, but most remained imprisoned for their full terms. Then they were tried under Article 70,190 and the special religious sections in Article 227 which resulted in various terms of imprisonment and exile up to 5 years.

Crude official anti-religious propaganda falls on well "prepared" minds among the non-religious elements of the local people among whom the Pentecostals live. Such propaganda includes such terms as "spies of American Imperialism," "paid agents," "people engaging in diversionary tactics," and "Baptists" as a general term for all religious believers in the Soviet Union. An ordinary Russian man cannot understand why he never has enough money to make ends meet -- and he has only two children and a working wife. His Pentecostal neighbor, on the other hand, has ten children, a wife, and aged parents -- all of whom are well-fed. But this Russian man understands when he goes to the movies and is shown Pentecostals praying on a lonely beach where they are secretly holding a meeting forbidden by the authorities. The movie says, however, they are "waiting for a Noah's Ark filled with dollars from America."

Systematic anti-religious campaigns, especially organized lectures, films, discussions, etc., create a hostile attitude towards believers. These campaigns are still carried out and not only in social centers such as clubs and movie theaters, but also at places where Pentecostals work, further complicating their already unstable work situation.

It is extremely difficult for believers to find work if they lose their jobs, since everywhere administrators restrict the hiring of "Baptists." This is so although construction managers are very eager to hire them -- practically all Pentecostals are construction workers -- because of their superior discipline (they have a surprisingly low rate of absenteeism, especially in comparison to the chronic alcoholism of other Soviet workers) and their work is of consistently high quality.

For example, N.P. Goretoi's wife, when her husband was in labor camp and she was left with six children, could not find work for a long time. After a while, the head doctor of a hospital told her, "I would be glad to transfer you to the kitchen where we very much need honest and capable people like you. But I can't do that since you are a Baptist and people know that you might poison the milk." And this was said to a woman who has brought up ten children under extremely difficult circumstances and who has now 17 grandchildren.

Repressions extend not only to adult members of Pentecostal communities but also to their children. The creation of an unhealthy atmosphere around the school children of believers begins as early as the first grade, when children refuse for religious reasons to join the Oktyabrata, later the Pioneers and the Komsomol. (Ed.-- Communist youth organizations) Unjustified lowering of grades, trials conducted by the entire school, fights -- frequently provoked by the teachers -- subjective and, in many cases, false references when a student graduates from school -- all this often leads children of Pentecostals to refuse to go to school. Therefore, although they are very good students, they usually finish only the eighth grade. Even if they manage to finish the tenth grade, their way to higher education is closed due to bad references which often mention that the student "holds anti-Soviet views."

There are numerous incidents of parents being forcibly deprived of their own children and their children are then placed in state boarding schools. In Nakhodka in 1961, the Voev children ran away from their boarding school several times. But, after dogs were sent out to find them, they were sent back to boarding school. There is one instance when the authorities -- even before the child was born -- decided to take it away when it reached nine months of age.

Under Soviet law, mothers who have ten or 12 children are entitled to certain privileges: medals for heroic mothers, financial benefits, free breakfasts for their children in school, and housing without waiting on line, etc. Yet, for some reason, Pentecostal mothers are ineligible for these benefits.

One of the biggest problems facing young Pentecostals is military service. To serve in the army, specifically to carry arms and to take the military oath (i.e., to shoot people in case of war), is something they refuse to do for religious reasons. It was during the sixties that particularly harsh repressive acts were undertaken against youths from Pentecostal families. From 1960 to 1967, eleven young men from Nakhodka were sentenced to camp terms ranging from 3 to 5 years.

Even when they have agreed to serve in construction battalions, youths have occasionally been tried by military tribunals for refusing to take the military oath. This is a clear infraction of the law, inasmuch as the tribunal is empowered to try only those who have already taken this oath.

Such are the basic conditions of the daily life of Pentecostal communities in Staro-Titarovka and Nakhodka. However, the worst problems which exist between the authorities, on the one hand, and all religious sects in the USSR, on the other, arise due to the sects' legal status. Every religious group in the Soviet Union must be "legalized". This means that each sect must be registered, the actual purpose of which is to subordinate the sect to Party control. The Registration Decree prohibits religious instruction for children, youth and women's meetings, proselytizing, missionary activities, and charitable works. It further obligates the sect strictly to adhere to all state laws, including obligatory military service, and forbids the observance of various religious practices.

In this regard, Vasily Fyodorovich Patrushev, a member of the Nakhodka Emigration Council, told me, "We have no choice: either we become criminals in the eyes of the state and refuse to observe the Registration Decree out of respect for Christ's teachings, or we become criminals before God by fulfilling the state's demands. For us, believers who live by our consciences, God's law is supreme and we cannot be criminals before the Lord."

At the present time, about half of all Pentecostals in the USSR belong to registered sects (official census figures do not exist but they estimate their membership to be 200,000). These groups are largely in Odessa, Kiev, Rovno and other villages of the western Ukraine. Despite active agitation by official church pastors (who are usually spokesmen for official policy towards religious believers), the Pentecostals in Central Asia, Siberia and the Pacific coast did not, and do not, want to register their sects, citing a higher law. As a result: 50-80 ruble fines for every illegal (from the authorities' point of view) meeting; confiscation of homes where meetings have been held; searches and confiscations of Bibles and psalm books; threats and terror tactics accompanying every "discussion" between special agents of the KGB and the more authoritative members of the communities -- this last is a daily occurrence. In Chernogorsk (Abakanskaya oblast) in 1971, authorities dispersed worshippers with fire hoses and demolished with bulldozers the house where they had gathered. This incident forced the community to seek aid from the American embassy.

"If the Party Program says that Communism and religion are not compatible and that the goal of this country is to build Communism," said B. Perchatkin, a 30-year-old member of the Nakhodka Emigration Council, "we have no grounds for hope, no hope of improving our situation. Even if they promised improvement, based on our experience and that of our fathers and grandfathers, we wouldn't believe them. Our only escape is emigration."

Thus, Soviet Pentecostals were pushed to emigration, not by any specific event, but by their entire experience under Soviet rule. The absence of social and political conditions for a normal religious life does not, however, adequately explain the motives behind Pentecostal emigration. To properly evaluate the depth and vital significance of the Pentecostal movement to leave the USSR, one must consider their religious psychology and conscience. Their desire to leave the Soviet Union is not merely a result of repression, since it is not a part of the creed of truly religious people to flee from difficulties which strengthen their faith. Rather their movement is a consequence of their belief in the necessity of "leaving a land of evil."

The authorities have not adopted a specific policy on Pentecostal emigration for religious reasons. In fact, a certain decrease of repression has been noticed in Nakhodka. The people have the right to gather openly without being fined or called to the KGB. The authorities may believe that this policy will deter the Pentecostals from trying to emigrate or even change the mood of the communities. I can only state that the authorities may allow a dozen or so of the more active families in Staro-Titarovka and Nakhodka to emigrate to Israel under the guise of family reunification, but they would hold the mass emigration of entire Pentecostal communities to be a highly displeasing prospect.

During my stay in Staro-Titarovka, N.P. Goretoi and another rank-and-file member of the community were called to the village council to explain my arrival. During this interview, a KGB operative for religious matters assured Nikolai Petrovich that he and his family would be released from the Soviet Union as soon as they applied. The agent insisted that "it's not necessary to act for all and in behalf of everyone."

A final interesting note. Soon after my trip to Nakhodka, two ministers of the official Soviet Pentecostal Church went to Nakhodka from Novosibirsk so as to spread the official government line on emigration. They attempted to split the Nakhodka community and to isolate those who actively wish to emigrate and who are in contact with the Moscow Helsinki Group. "We should await help from God, not from some sinister forces," one of these ministers assured community members.

The above facts clearly attest to the authorities' fear that the recent emergence of the organized mass Pentecostal emigration movement is one more social phenomenon highlighting the dearth of human rights in the USSR. There is no doubt that in the not too distant future, the authorities openly will go on the offensive against the Pentecostals, particularly against those who are trying, with the help of the Moscow Helsinki Group to inform world public opinion about the current situation.

Appendix III

MOSCOW GROUP DOCUMENT #23
AN UPDATE ON THE SITUATION OF THE PENTECOSTALS,
WRITTEN BY ARKADY POLISHCHUK
JUNE 28, 1977

The general characteristics of the Pentecostal situation in the USSR have already been described in Document #11, "On the Right to Emigrate for Religious Reasons" (issued by the Moscow Helsinki Group on Dec. 2, 1976), and in Lydia Voronina's account of her trip on behalf of the Moscow Helsinki Group to visit two Pentecostal communities. The facts and problems set forth in these two documents had not previously been investigated or made public by any Soviet or international commissions.

Since then, the emigration movement of the Pentecostals and the Baptists, who have joined them, has assumed a dimension which is unusual for the USSR. During 1977, on behalf of the Public Group, I had close communications with the representatives of numerous communities which have decided to leave the USSR. For a variety of reasons, the following account of this activity lacks complete documentation.

On June 26, 1977, Pentecostals and Baptists sent a fifth declaration to L. Brezhnev, President of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet:

If the spirit of Helsinki is not a deception, not a pitiful shred of paper, then issue a high level directive to all executive organs and departments not to torture us any longer. Let us go peacefully, by removing all barriers and hinderances to our departure from the country.

The number of believers who want to emigrate from the Soviet Union because of extreme difficulty and personal danger in practicing freely their religion is growing every day. The fourth declaration, issued at the end of May 1977, listed 1,800 people with these problems. By the time the fifth declaration emerged, the number of people listed had grown to 3,500. Many declarations, listing others involved, were also issued in May and June of 1977 from Nakhodka, Magadan, Vladivostok, Batumi, the Ukraine, Kirgizia and Lithuania. By July, 1977, there was as well a large increase in the number of Baptists in Lithuania and Estonia openly expressing their desire to emigrate.

A unique feature of the Pentecostal and Baptist struggle to emigrate from the USSR is their desire to leave as a group. They demand that believers be allowed to leave not as single families (as is the practice of the authorities with Germans, Jews, Armenians and other emigrant categories) but by entire groups, even entire church communities, defined geographically. This unique feature of their emigration movement is based on spiritual, social, historical and psychological reasons.

From June 2 until June 22, 1977, I visited the Krasnodar region, on behalf of the Moscow Helsinki Group, where I met many Pentecostals and Baptists. One is impressed with the steadfast determination of these people. This determination is dictated not only by inspired religious feelings, but also by 60 years of repression, insult and slander. In the 1960's every Pentecostal and Baptist was in danger of being sent to a labor camp. Today, though the number of believers in camps has declined, other forms of persecution have not decreased.

In every Pentecostal family I met, the children themselves had been subject to all kinds of oppression. Mothers and fathers with many children, tearfully told me about this treatment, whether from the Krasnodar region, (villages of Staro-Titorovskaya, Leningradskaya, Kholmskaya, Karer, the city of Kropotkin) or from Batumi, Sukhumi, Kabardin-Balkariya, Rovno, Nakhodka, Riga, and Valga. The children are insulted by their teachers and by other students. They are forced to join the Otkabryata, Pioneers, and the Komsomol (Communist youth organizations). If they refuse to join these atheist organizations then, for years afterwards they are given lowered grades. In sum, the children of believers are the victims of systematic educational discrimination, despite the fact that they are sometimes more diligent and eager to learn than their fellow students.

From their earliest days in school, each such student is marked by a written evaluation of his character which, like a life-long stamp, brands him as unreliable. I know the stories of hundreds of children and young people and yet I can name only one, Klavdia Pavlovich, of Vilnius in Lithuania, who managed to be admitted to the local university.

Additionally, I do not know of anyone who, after becoming a believer and had already received higher education, remained in their professional employment such as teacher or engineer. They were all required to "requalify" as workers--and as lowly paid ones, at that.

In her account of January 12, 1977, Lydia Voronina reported some abatement of repression in the city of Nakhodka. Actually, certain facts reveal the authorities' clumsy attempts to adapt to new circumstances which have arisen, partially because repression in Nakhodka has become known abroad. Events in 1977 show that the apparatus of repression has merely started to use more "hidden" punitive measures, such as provocation. Additionally, the KGB and other police have promised to stop discrimination, when in effect, they have not.

In the Primorsky region, where Nakhodka is located, the official "Committee to Defend the Rights of Believers" has begun to function. This committee includes an official named Kraevoi, who is in charge of matters relating to religious cults, school teachers and other persons who seek anonymity. Until now, these so-called "defenders" of believers have gone from house to house in Nakhodka and other cities of the Primorsky region, trying to talk people out of emigrating, and encouraging children to renounce their parents. In some instances people are promised assistance, including apartments, education and good jobs (all things which are systematically denied believers), while other people are threatened. This committee reads to believers letters from Pentecostals who have emigrated, such as E. Konshak in West Germany and M. Plotnikova in the U.S., describing the horrors of the capitalist paradise and the persecutions to which believers are doomed. It is unclear how the "public" receives letters which bear no address. Wary Pentecostals believe that this "committee" is an agent of the KGB. These very same letters are also disseminated in other areas of the country including Western Ukraine, Belorussia, and Lithuania.

Lydia Voronina, in her report, noted that two Pentecostal leaders, connected with the authorities, followed her to Nakhodka. Since then, these messengers of the KGB have been in many communities of the country. Bibles in hand, they try to convince believers that they should not emigrate. It is noteworthy that in some communities such as Rovenskaya, believers completely refuse to listen to these officials. One of these so-called "brothers", whom the authorities had assigned to conduct this campaign "from the inside", acknowledged that he had been given 600 rubles for his travels around the country and that his comrade from Lutsk had been given the same amount.

Finally, intensive preparations are now underway for the creation of the official "Union of Autonomous Pentecostals". More than half of the Pentecostals (according to their own estimates, 500,000 people) have refused to register because they believe the existing legislation on religious cults is repressive. Now, in order to place the believers under control, the authorities are scraping together the "Union of Autonomous Pentecostals" and plan to hold their congress not later than October, 1977. However, they are having considerable difficulty because they demand that participants of this "congress" denounce emigration, but only a few will agree to this, even some of those forced to cooperate as a result of threats and pressure.

In May, 1977, 40 families in Nakhodka received invitations to immigrate to the U.S., one was received in Batumi, and nine in Chernogorsk, of the Krasnodar region.

Captain Drozdova and Lieutenant Smolentsev, of Visa and Passport Offices in Nakhodka and Vladivostok, tell the Pentecostals: "These invitations have been sent by the CIA. Why do you refer to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which is illegally sent into the USSR to undermine the foundations of the Soviet government? This document does not give any right to emigrate." This understanding of the rights of citizens naturally accompanies the continual tyranny of the authorities and that is why the old arsenal of repression remains their chief argument.

The KGB understands, more clearly than ever before that one can stifle people not only through camps and psychiatric hospitals, but also by fines and administrative repressions. One must also stress that repressions in the USSR against believers are based on domestic laws. These laws are in blatant contradiction to the Helsinki Declaration, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, all to which the Soviet government is committed.

The following are only a few of the various "legal" oppressions to which believers have been subjected in 1977:

Fines -- Fining is the most widely used form of oppression. Fines are directed against the lowest-paid citizens in concert with the mass discrimination against believers in the area of employment. These fines hit the largest Soviet families in which 8 to 10 children is not unusual. In this way, old people and babies are condemned to hunger and poverty. For example, in the course of a year the P.V. Syakov family, 1 Pervomaisky St., Inozemtsevo, Stavropolsky region, four times was fined 40 rubles, including three times for refusing to register as a religious group. In another case, the Gutsman family, 58 Krizhanovsky, Rovno, was fined 50 rubles. And the Ziyunya family, in addition to being fined 50 rubles, was subjected to dispersal of their prayer meeting, house searches without a warrant, and confiscation of their pre-revolutionary edition of the Bible. The case of A.V. Bondarshyuk, 78 Yuzhnaya St., Vinnitsa, is another example. Charged by the 102 Administrative Commission of the Starogorodsky Regional Executive Committee of violating the order of the PVC, USSR, of March 26, 1966, Bondarchyuk was fined 50 rubles on March 24, 1977. According to the authorities, "she gathered (believers) in her house and conducted a secret meeting of 35 believing Christians." In yet another instance, on June 9, 1977, those attending a prayer meeting in the city of Berdichev, including Ivan Bodyan and Vasily Melnik, and others, were fined 50 rubles each. Traditional fines and the noting of those who gather to pray as police and volunteers raided and dispersed their prayer meetings, were particularly evident in April, May and June, 1977, in Latvia, in the Krasnodar region, in Kabardino-Blakariya and the Ukraine.

Dispersals -- In May in the city of Artemovsk, Donetsk, the militia attempted to disperse and arrest the participants in a funeral. The believers were saved only by the poor organization of the attempt as the militia did not manage to get all the trucks to the cemetery in time. In May, near Kiev, a wedding in a prayer house was dispersed.

Deprivation of Parental Rights -- In the city of Gorlovka, Donetsk, the authorities threaten to take away the 14-year-old daughter of Olga Sidorchuk. This cruel type of persecution still remains in the authorities arsenal. The children of Vasily Kovalchuk from Krivoy Rog, of the Ukraine, were taken away from their parents and are held in a childrens' home.

Psychiatric Confinement -- For more than 2 years, engineer Mikhail Stepanovich Zverev, of the village Energetik, Zheleznovodsky region, Stavropolsky area, has been held in the psychiatric hospital in Chernyakhovsk, Kaliningradskaya. He is completely healthy psychologically, having worked until the day of his arrest. He was committed because of his religious manuscripts which criticize the government for violating its own laws and for persecuting believers.

A Baptist, Anna Vasilievna Chertkova, born in 1927, is also in a psychiatric hospital as a result of her convictions (Tashkent 70084, Kalinsky region, Chukhursai 64 (Psychiatric Hospital, section #9). She wants only to emigrate from the USSR.

Punitive Conscription -- On June 23, 1977, the Peoples' Court of Gluboksky region, Chernovitskaya, sentenced 18-year-old Zagari Kiriya, son of a Pentecostal preacher, to 2 1/2 years in camp. On May 15, 1977, the family had applied to emigrate from the USSR. Judge Ignatenko ignored this fact altogether and sent the youth to camp "for refusing to serve in the Army for religious reasons." (One should note that one year before this incident, Konstantin Pichuzh, of the same region, did not refuse to serve in the army, but, after five months of service, he was sentenced to three years in camp. RSFSR, Astrakhanskaya oblast, city of Kacharyak, p.ya. UD 249/7A.)

In May, 1977, 160 Pentecostals of the Rovenskaya region in the Ukraine refused to be inducted into the army. The Pentecostals ascribe this incident--unique in the dimensions of its resistance to the authorities--not only to religious reasons and the desire to emigrate, but also because numerous incidents of cruel treatment of believers in the army had become widely known. Often, army service turns out to be just like being in a camp. Several Ukrainian Pentecostals in the army died from beating and torture. No less unique has been the reaction of the authorities to this refusal en masse: none of these youths are yet facing criminal charges.

Criminal Prosecution -- The threat of criminal prosecution now hangs over a preacher, Nikolai Kunitsa, city of Dubno, Rovenskaya, Ukraine; over a Baptist, Grigory Petrenko, Riga; and over Boris Perchatkin, Nakhodka, an activist in the Pentecostal emigration struggle. Recently, KGB workers repeatedly urged people who attended the same church as Perchatkin to give written testimony that allegedly he is conducting anti-Soviet agitation. Several times, unknown people have broken into his apartment, threatening reprisals against him, his wife, and children. Even his "tails"--usual for Pentecostals (whom I myself saw in the Krasnodar region)--are particularly rude towards Perchatkin. He is accosted, threatened with guns and his apartment is broken into at night.

Even on June 17, 1977--election day for the local Soviets--pressure on the Pentecostals did not cease. I saw in the village of Staro-Titovskaya how they were forced to "vote", although they had said earlier that they would not vote since they want to emigrate from the USSR. Not one of them went to the polling place, so the polling commission went around in a bus to all the Pentecostals' houses with the "ballot" box, using flattery, abuse, threats, requests and even swearing. However, this polling campaign was a complete fiasco.

Document #11 and its supplement describe the Pentecostals' situation in the USSR on facts which antedate the signing of the Helsinki agreement. Lydia Voronina's analytical account reveals the situation at the end of 1976. And today, on the eve of the Belgrade summit meeting, I can certify that the Helsinki agreement, since the day of its signing two years ago, has not alleviated the tragic fate of the Pentecostals and the Baptists.
